Eighteen years ago, you were born.

Slide

Eighteen years ago, we didn't know if we were going to keep you. Eighteen years ago, a blocked bowel could have taken you from us.

Slide

It was called a jejunal atresia. Eighteen years ago, we were lucky enough to have Dr. James Carson residing in Spokane. He saved your life, not once, but twice, that first year.

You were a little bitty pretty one and we watched you grow.

Slide

You were a little bitty pretty one and we watched you grow.

In 1996 Matilda came out and you sat through the entire movie. I remember watching you, your elbows on the little plastic picnic table, your chin resting in your little palms, just enthralled by this little girl who looked like you.

Slide

You were a little bitty pretty one and we watched you grow.

We knew we would have to buy that movie for you.

When you were three you would race through the house, and shout when you won.

You were racing yourself.

Slide

When you were six, you were leading your little brother into trouble.

Slide

When you were nine, we watched you play the piano.

Slide

You would walk through the rain forest across from our house and tell us fairy stories.

Slide

When you were 16 we almost lost you again.

Slide

That appendicitis attack was hours from killing you. We worried and prayed again. We watched the sunset wondering if you would survive.

Slide

We taught you to crawl, then walk, then run. We let you make choices, and ask questions. We even answered the tough ones.

Slide

We tried to give you freedom, and allow you to grow. We taught you to love, and to give. We taught you about life, yet we still had lots to learn.

Slide

You will always be our little bitty pretty one no matter where life takes you.

We will always be proud of you.

Picture of Sammy and Theda

Slide

You made us see life through your eyes. You made us cry, and made us laugh, and made us hear that still small voice in the night.

We love you for who you are and are proud of all you have done.

Slide

Soon you will graduate high school, graduate from Awana, and go on with your life.

Slide

We will guide you, love you, and still be very proud of you.
